Dear Diana:

Evelyn and I in the past months were busy planning and in due course leading a trip to England to raise money for the British National Trust. Our plan was to visit National Trust houses and to invite only those who gave a substantial amount of money to the National Trust. To make it different from routine trips to those houses, we arranged for royalty to entertain us for lunches and dinners at their estates. The expedition was a tremendous success and raised a lot of money. There was only one drawback and that was that we planned at the end of the trip to try to come to see you and Michael, but before we left we learned of Michael's death. We went to Cornwall for a holiday at the end of the trip.

We want to extend to you our deepest sympathy and we were privileged to know Michael and to know his ability and his kindness.

We hope that you can readjust your life to continue your work and to take over some of his projects. We enclose a contribution in his memory.

Our very best regards.

Sincerely,

Eric P. Newman
